COMMENT. Prologue written by Macklin: (Cooke, Memoirs of Charles Macklin, pp. 150–51.)

From scheming, pelting, famine, and despair,
Behold to grace restored an exil'd Play'r:
Your Sanction yet his fortune must compleat,
And give him privilege to laugh and eat.

No revolution plots are mine again;
You see, thank Heaven, the quietest of men.
I pray that all domestic feuds might cease;
And beggar'd by the war, solicit peace;
When urg'd by wrongs, and prompted to rebel;
I sought for freedom, and for freedom fell;
What could support me in the sevenfold dame?
I was no Shadrak and no angel came.
