

- answered insolently "The Prologue will not be played tonight." This provoked them more and an excuse sent by Davis not being admitted, Mr Foote was obliged to appear and promised that if they would wait till between y<sup>e</sup> play and y<sup>e</sup> farce, y<sup>e</sup> Prologue should be given. . . . All this was not over till past 11 P.M. Monday 22

COMMENT. A Tragedy for Warm Weather. Written after the manner of the Worst, as well as the Best of the English Poets, containing amongst a Variety of Particulars, curious, entertaining, and pathetic, the Rebellion of the Journeymen Taylors on the Score of Wages, etc. Neville MS Diary: Half past Six went to y<sup>e</sup> Haymarket Theatre but could not get into y<sup>e</sup> Pit or first Gallery, so stood on y<sup>e</sup> last row of the shilling Gallery, tho' I could see little, to see how y<sup>e</sup> Taylors, a new tragedy for warm weather, would go off, being the first night of its performance. 3rd Act hiss'd—y<sup>e</sup> Gods in y<sup>e</sup> shilling Gallery called for y<sup>e</sup> Builder's Prologue—hissed off y<sup>e</sup> part of y<sup>e</sup> Old Maid twice and Davies who came to make an excuse. The Gentlemen, many of whom were there, cried "No Prologue" but to no purpose. At last Foote said if he knew their demands he would be ready to comply with them. The noise ceasing, after some time he was told the Builder's Prologue was desired.

He said he had done all in his power to get the performers, having seen them. After some time he came and informed them he had got the performers together, and if the House would be pleased to accept of y<sup>e</sup> Prologue in “our dresses as we are you shall have it.” This was followed by great clapping which shows the Genius of our English mobility ever generous after victory. Left y<sup>e</sup> House after y<sup>e</sup> Farce began. [Flints were journeymen tailors who refused to comply with the masters’ terms and the regulations of the magistrate, in contradistinction to those who submitted and were in derision stiled Dungs. The term dates from 1764—OED. An extract from the Occasional Prologue (the Builder’s Prologue) in prose on the opening of the Theatre Royal in the Haymarket, by Foote published in the London Magazine July 1767, p. 351. Foote, Scaffold, and Prompter are the three participants. Foote tells Scaffold he will be paid by the audience. Scaffold notes that the audience must in that case be pleased at all times. Foote promises “no long processions [will] crowd my narrow scenes.” He assumes that any of the reforms he plans will but echo the public voice. The Prompter then calls the actors on.]

THE TAYLORS. As 2 July, with New Prologue by Foote. Also THE CITIZEN. Cast not listed.

COMMENT. Neville MS Diary: At 6 took my place in y<sup>e</sup> Pit. I expected y<sup>e</sup> *Taylor*s would have been damned; but with certain alterations and additions it went off better than it did last night. It is a sort of burlesque tragedy. If there is any wit in it, it is very low and unlike that in Mr Foote’s other pieces. The Prologue, spoken by him, is more diverting than any part of y<sup>e</sup> play. Some Masters and leading Journeymen are taken off. [Cast listed.] The Citizen was vilely performed, except Old Philpot by Weston. Palmer is not equal to y<sup>e</sup> young one. They went off without concluding it. We had y<sup>e</sup> Builders Prologue before y<sup>e</sup> farce, by y<sup>e</sup> same means we had it last night. Foote wished for y<sup>e</sup> Builder, as y<sup>e</sup> person who supplied his place did his part vilely.

JANE SHORE. Hastings – Barry; Dumont – T. Barry; Bellmour – Davis; Ratcliff – Palmer; Catesby – Gardner; Gloster – Sowdon; Alicia – Mrs Jefferies; Jane Shore – Mrs Dancer. Also LETHE. Old Man and Lord Chalkstone – Shuter; Aesop – Newton; Charon – Brownsmith; Drunken Man – Weston; Mercury – Jefferies; Fine Gentleman – Palmer; Frenchman – Quick; Bowman – Smith; the fine Lady – Mrs Gardner.
