 To the Public Advertiser: Sir, I spent an agreeable evening lately with a Country Friend at the Primitive Puppet Show, and was not displeas'd at the ridicule pointed at the dull, spiritless stuff, which composes modern Sentimental Comedy. I was entertained too with the manner in which some of the Actors were taken off; But I cannot think mimicry worthy to furnish an Evening Entertainment for a Polite British Audience, or suited to the happy ridicule and pointed wit of Aristophanes. The old Roman comedy, as it was called, was designed for nobler purposes: it was directed to improve the head and mend the heart. The keen manly satire of that Comedy was pointed at Upstart, Braggart, Vice, and to expose the dangerous unfeeling craft of innocent Villainy, or to use the words of Mr Pope — Brand the bold front of shameless, guilty man. Such was, and such ought to be, the salutary Direction of Wit, and Satire by exhibiting characters in their genuine colours, when the mask, which disguises and conceals them from the eyes of the Weak the Credulous, and the Ignorant, is drawn off. The words of Horace are — Detrahere et pellam, nitidus qua quisque per ora Cederet, introrsum turpis. Yours, Dramaticus.
 Poetry for the Public Advertiser. Epigram on the New Tragedy ALONZO.
- No wonder that each female voice
 Resounds Alonzo's praise;
 A sure foundation of Applause,
 The crafty Author lays.*
- Against the Virtue of his Wife
 A Husband, if he's wise
 According to the Gallant HOME,
 Should not believe his eyes.*
