COMMENT. “Nothing could be more affecting than [Mrs Crawford’s] expression of the sorrows in the character; nor anything more languid and undecorous than her level recitation . . . Discharge the fire, and she sinks into a tasteless disregard of the business, which injures, if it does not destroy the illusion. It is in this that Mrs Siddons triumphs over her . . . But she cannot, so powerfully as Mrs Crawford, assail at intervals the heart” (Gazetteer, 30 Nov.).
